I get the phone with icloud. It's asking the fild password that I have not yet given it. Now it's asking for the iCloud password. I want to set it up as it is. Can you help me? Thanks a lot A: Here is the answer: and d 403, 406. In the matter before us, the building permit at issue was sought on behalf of the owner, who, at the time of his applications, owned and possessed the land, not for purposes of construction or development, but for the purpose of improving the land as a residence. There is no claim here that the owner of the property had any intention at the time of his applications to make the land available for future development or construction. The question, then, is whether the restrictions on use and occupancy contained in the building permit are reasonably necessary to protect the general public in the neighborhood from the harm that results from the introduction of a mobile home into an area zoned for single family residence. I find that they are not. Defendant, arguing for a strict construction of the zoning ordinance, contends that since the ordinance does not proscribe the use of a mobile home in any zoning district, and mobile homes are not identified or defined by any other provision in the ordinance, they must be permitted in any district. To adopt this argument would be to engage in legislation by judicial fiat. "The rule of strict construction is one of last resort, to be invoked only when legislative intent cannot be ascertained from a reasonable interpretation of the language of the statute. Courts generally have declined to apply a strict construction in the absence of a strong legislative mandate and instead have chosen a broad construction of zoning statutes to effectuate their purposes and to prevent their misuse as a tool for unbridled exclusion of a particular parcel of land from a given area."
